COMPLAINT

1. The United States has long sheltered refugees seeking a haven from persecution. The 1980 Refugee Act enshrined that national commitment in law. While Congress has placed some limitations on the right to seek asylum over the years, it has never permitted the Executive Branch to categorically ban asylum based on where a noncitizen enters the country. To the contrary, Congress has expressly provided that “[a]ny [noncitizen] who is physically present in the United States or who arrives in the United States (whether or not at a designated port of arrival ...), irrespective of such [noncitizen’s] status, may apply for asylum.” 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(1) (emphasis added). That plain statutory text precludes the President and the Executive Branch from barring noncitizens from asylum based on their manner of entry into the United States.

2. This case challenges a June 4, 2024, Interim Final Rule (“Rule”)¹ (attached hereto as Exhibit A) and accompanying Implementation Guidance (“Guidance”) (attached hereto as Exhibit B) that categorically exclude an entire group of asylum seekers from access to that protection because of where they entered the country, directly contrary to the statute’s mandate. Under the Rule, which incorporates a June 3, 2024, Presidential Proclamation (attached hereto as Exhibit C) noncitizens arriving between ports of entry at the southern border are, with extremely limited exceptions, categorically ineligible for asylum whenever a rolling seven-day average of the number of daily “encounters” of inadmissible noncitizens exceeds a certain numerical threshold. That threshold has been exceeded continuously since July 2020.² This policy blatantly violates the plain language of Section 1158(a)(1).

3. The Rule also imposes new, unlawful regulations governing how arriving noncitizens are screened to determine whether they are eligible for two other more limited forms of protection against removal to persecution or torture (or “refoulement”): (1) protection under the Convention Against Torture, and (2) withholding of removal under 8 U.S.C. § 1231(b)(3). Prior to the Rule, an immigration officer interviewed each noncitizen encountered to ascertain whether the noncitizen had an intention to apply for asylum or a fear of persecution. If the person was ineligible for asylum, an asylum officer then determined whether the noncitizen had a credible fear, defined as a “significant possibility,” of persecution or torture. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(v); 8 C.F.R. §§ 208.30 (e)(2)-(3). That screening threshold helped to mitigate the risk that noncitizens would be erroneously returned to persecution or torture in their home countries.

4. The Rule, however, adopts a screening policy that will systematically lead to the refoulement of people seeking protection from persecution, torture, and death. First, under the Rule, a noncitizen can be quickly removed from the United States without any process whatsoever unless an immigration officer—usually a Border Patrol agent—determines that the person has “manifested” a fear of return. Under this requirement, individuals must “manifest” a fear of persecution or torture, without being asked if they have a fear. In practice, noncitizens who have just crossed the border, and may be hungry, exhausted, ill, or traumatized after fleeing persecution in their home countries and danger in Mexico, are likely to be intimidated by armed, uniformed Border Patrol officers, and are thus unlikely to “manifest” their fear of return. Experience shows that, when in the past a “manifestation of fear” standard or similar directives not to ask about fear of removal were imposed, asylum seekers’ fear of return has gone unrecognized.

5. Second, even if a Border Patrol agent finds that a noncitizen adequately “manifests” a fear, the noncitizen still will not avoid removal unless an asylum officer determines that the noncitizen meets a new, more stringent screening standard: instead of satisfying the “significant possibility” standard, the noncitizen will need to show a “reasonable probability” of torture or persecution. The practical impact will be the return of many victims of torture and persecution to dangerous conditions.

6. What is more, even if a noncitizen “manifests” a fear and gets screened for some form of protection, the corresponding Guidance drastically reduces the minimum time noncitizens have to find and consult with a lawyer before a credible fear interview. Previously, they had at least 24 hours, reduced from 48 hours just one year ago. Now, noncitizens may have as few as four hours, which will be spent in a border facility without meaningful access to family or counsel.

In practice, this removes any chance of receiving a legal consultation, much less representation, for the overwhelming majority of noncitizens in Defendants' custody, greatly increasing the risk of refoulement. A copy of the Guidance issued by Immigration and Customs Enforcement has been posted online by the press. On information and belief, Customs and Border Protection has issued similar guidance, also imposing a 4-hour consultation period for asylum seekers detained in its custody. References in this Complaint to the "Implementation Guidance" and "Guidance" refer to the versions issued by both agencies.

7. The Rule and Guidance violate the Immigration and Nationality Act ("INA") and are contrary to law under the Administrative Procedure Act ("APA"). In addition, they are arbitrary and capricious in violation of the APA, and the Rule was promulgated in violation of the APA's procedural notice-and-comment requirements.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

8. This case arises under the APA, 5 U.S.C. § 701 et seq.; the INA, 8 U.S.C. § 1101 et seq.; and its implementing regulations. This Court has subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and 8 U.S.C. § 1252(e)(3).

9. Venue is proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1), because Defendants are agencies of the United States and officers of the United States acting in their official capacity, many Defendants reside in this District, and a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claims occurred in this District. Venue is also appropriate under 8 U.S.C. § 1252(e)(3)(A).

PARTIES

I. Plaintiffs

10. Plaintiff Las Americas Immigrant Advocacy Center ("Las Americas") is a nonprofit legal services organization based in El Paso, Texas, dedicated to serving the legal needs of low-income immigrants, including asylum seekers. An essential part of Las Americas' mission is to provide immigration counseling and legal services to asylum seekers subjected to expedited removal. This work includes assisting asylum seekers in preparing for credible fear interviews, representing them during those interviews, and representing them throughout the process of obtaining immigration judge review of negative credible fear determinations. Las Americas also counsels people in Mexico who are trying to seek asylum the United States so that they are aware of the CBP One know what to expect in a credible fear interview.

11. Las Americas' mission is significantly frustrated by the Rule and Guidance. Because the Rule and Guidance reduce the number of people eligible for asylum, and significantly shorten the time that noncitizens referred for credible fear interviews have to find counsel, Las Americas is impeded in its ability to provide counseling and legal services to those seeking protection and subject to expedited removal. Las Americas is likewise harmed by Defendants' decision to issue the Interim Final Rule without first providing notice and an opportunity to comment. In addition to providing legal services to noncitizens on both sides of the U.S.-Mexico border, Las Americas strives to advocate and educate the public about changes to immigration law, but that work was rendered impossible by Defendants' failure to provide advance notice regarding these illegal changes.

12. Plaintiff Refugee and Immigrant Center for Education and Legal Services ("RAICES") is a nonprofit, non-partisan organization headquartered in San Antonio, Texas. RAICES' mission is to defend the rights of immigrants and refugees; empower individuals, families, and communities of immigrants and refugees; and advocate for liberty and justice. RAICES provides free and low-cost immigration legal services to underserved immigrant children, families, and individuals, and is the largest immigration legal services provider in Texas.

RAICES also conducts social services programming for immigrants, engages in advocacy work, and provides bond assistance to individuals seeking release from DHS custody. A central piece of RAICES' work with detained people involves helping them prepare for the credible fear process.

13. RAICES' mission is also frustrated by the Rule and Guidance. The significant reduction in the number of people eligible for asylum, and of the time that noncitizens will have to find legal counsel prior to a credible fear interview, will reduce its ability to provide free and low-cost legal services to underserved immigrant communities. And the decision by Defendants to issue the rule without first giving notice and an opportunity to comment prevented RAICES from engaging in advocacy regarding these changes and likewise prevented RAICES from raising important factors that Defendants should have considered before moving forward with these illegal changes.

II. Defendants

14. Defendant Department of Homeland Security ("DHS") is a cabinet-level department of the U.S. federal government. Its components include U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services ("USCIS"), U.S. Customs and Border Protection ("CBP"), and U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE").

15. Defendant USCIS is the sub-agency of DHS that, through its asylum officers, conducts interviews of individuals seeking asylum or other protection and adjudicates affirmative applications for asylum.

16. Defendant CBP is the sub-agency of DHS that is responsible for the apprehension, processing, and detention of individuals seeking asylum or other relief at or near the U.S. border.

17. Defendant ICE is the sub-agency of DHS that is responsible for executing removal orders and overseeing immigration detention.

18. Defendant U.S. Department of Justice (“DOJ”) is a cabinet-level department of the United States federal government.

19. Defendant EOIR is the sub-agency of DOJ that, through its immigration judges and appellate immigration judges, both conducts limited review of negative credible fear determinations in expedited removal proceedings and adjudicates regular removal proceedings and appeals.

20. Defendant Alejandro Mayorkas is the Secretary of Homeland Security. He is sued in his official capacity. Defendant Mayorkas directs each of the component agencies within the DHS. In his official capacity, Defendant Mayorkas is responsible for the administration of the immigration laws pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1103 and is empowered to grant asylum or other relief.

21. Defendant Ur Jaddou is the Director of USCIS. She is sued in her official capacity.

22. Defendant Troy A. Miller is the Senior Official Performing the Duties of the Commissioner for CBP. He is sued in his official capacity.

23. Defendant Patrick J. Lechleitner is the Acting Director of ICE. He is sued in his official capacity.

24. Defendant Merrick Garland is the Attorney General of the United States. He is sued in his official capacity. Defendant Garland oversees each of the component agencies within the Department of Justice. In his official capacity, Defendant Garland is responsible for the administration of the immigration laws pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1103.

25. Defendant David Neal is the Director of the Executive Office for Immigration Review (“EOIR”). He is sued in his official capacity.

FACTS

I. Background

26. The modern U.S. asylum system was established by the Refugee Act of 1980, Pub. L. 96-212, 94 Stat. 102. The Act reflects “one of the oldest themes in America’s history—welcoming homeless refugees to our shores,” and it “gives statutory meaning to our national commitment to human rights and humanitarian concerns.” S. Rep. No. 96-256, 1st Sess. at 1 (1979), reprinted in 1980 U.S.C.C.A.N. 141. One of Congress’s “primary purposes” was “to bring United States refugee law into conformance” with international refugee treaties and the bedrock principle of non-refoulement. INS v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421, 436 (1987).

27. Federal law provides three primary forms of protection for individuals fleeing persecution and torture: asylum under 8 U.S.C. § 1158; withholding of removal under 8 U.S.C. § 1231(b)(3); and protection under the Convention Against Torture (“CAT”), see Note to 8 U.S.C. § 1231; 8 C.F.R. § 1208.

A. Three Forms of Protection for Individuals Fleeing Persecution and Torture

i. Asylum

28. “Any [noncitizen] who is physically present in the United States or who arrives in the United States (whether or not at a designated port of arrival ...), irrespective of such [noncitizen’s] status, may apply for asylum.” 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(1). Noncitizens are eligible for asylum if they can show a “well-founded fear of persecution” on account of one or more of five protected grounds and that their country is unable or unwilling to protect them from that harm. 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(42)(A).

29. A “well-founded fear of persecution” has been construed to encompass even a ten percent chance that the applicant will be persecuted based on a protected characteristic.

30. Section 1158 contains a handful of narrow bars to asylum eligibility. Entering the United States without inspection between ports of entry is not, and has never been, the basis for a bar on asylum. 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(2), (b)(2)(A). Although the Executive Branch may create additional eligibility restrictions on asylum, such restrictions must be “consistent with” the overall scheme of 8 U.S.C. § 1158. Id. § 1158(b)(2)(C).

31. A person placed in regular removal proceedings under 8 U.S.C. § 1229a submits a defensive asylum application to the immigration judge to seek relief from removal. 8 C.F.R. § 208.2(b).

32. A person who has been placed in “expedited removal”—a truncated removal process that may be applied to certain noncitizens who are arriving in the United States or who have entered without inspection, 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)—may also raise an asylum claim through the credible fear screening process. If the person is found to have a credible fear of persecution, the noncitizen is then generally placed in regular removal proceedings under Section 240, where a defensive asylum application can be submitted.

ii. Withholding of Removal and CAT Protection

33. The withholding of removal statute prohibits the government from removing a noncitizen “to a country if . . . the [noncitizen’s] life or freedom would be threatened in that country because of the [noncitizen’s] race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion.” 8 U.S.C. § 1231(b)(3).

34. Whereas asylum can be obtained based on a well-founded fear of persecution, the withholding-of-removal statute requires the applicant to show that persecution is more likely than not—a higher standard. INS v. Stevic, 467 U.S. 407, 429-30 (1984). The withholding statute bars removal to any country as to which this showing is made. It is possible to receive withholding of removal as to multiple countries.

35. Regulations implementing the Convention Against Torture prohibit the removal of a noncitizen to any country where “it is more likely than not that he or she would be tortured.” 8 C.F.R. § 208.16(c)(2).

36. Withholding of removal and CAT protection are available to people who do not qualify for asylum. But the denial of asylum has major implications, notwithstanding the availability of these other forms of protection. In addition to the higher burden of proof these forms of protection impose, withholding of removal and CAT relief can be granted only after a person is ordered removed, and the grant of protection simply prevents the government from executing the removal order to the specific country or countries where the applicant has demonstrated a likelihood of persecution or torture. By contrast, people granted asylum do not receive a removal order and may become lawful permanent residents, 8 U.S.C. § 1159(b), and eventually U.S. citizens, id. § 1427.

37. In addition, the spouse and children of a person granted asylum may receive asylum as derivative family members, whether or not they accompanied the principal applicant to the United States. 8 U.S.C. § 1158(b)(3)(A). By contrast, withholding of removal and CAT protection do not permit derivative beneficiaries. Instead, spouses or children must be present in the United States, apply separately, and be granted withholding of removal or CAT protection independently, a process that can result in long-term family separation.

iii. The Expedited Removal System and Credible Fear Screening Interviews

38. In 1996, Congress established expedited removal to “substantially shorten and speed up the removal process” for certain noncitizens arriving without immigration documents. Make the Rd. N.Y. v. Wolf, 962 F.3d 612, 618 (D.C. Cir. 2020); see 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1).

Expedited removal may be applied to certain noncitizens who arrive at the border without valid entry documents or who enter without inspection. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(A)(i). Absent further proceedings to assess any fear claims, people subjected to expedited removal are ordered removed by an immigration officer “without further hearing or review.” Id.

39. But Congress’s interest in “efficient removal” was balanced against “a second, equally important goal: ensuring that individuals with valid asylum claims are not returned to countries where they could face persecution.” Grace v. Barr, 965 F.3d 883, 902 (D.C. Cir. 2020). Thus, Congress took care to safeguard access to asylum by ensuring that noncitizens were screened to determine whether they had a “credible fear” of returning to their country of origin.

40. The original agency regulations implementing the expedited removal statute in 1997 were designed to serve this interest, including by requiring immigration officers to advise noncitizens of their right to seek asylum and to ask if they feared removal. If so, they were referred for a credible fear interview. In the expedited removal process, noncitizens are entitled to “consult” with a person of their choosing “prior to the interview or any review thereof” as long as that review does not cause “unreasonable delay.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(iv). The original regulations provided noncitizens a minimum of 48 hours to consult an attorney before a credible fear interview. 62 Fed. Reg. 10312, 10318-20 (Mar. 6, 1997).

41. Because the credible fear interview is only a threshold screening device, a noncitizen needs to show only a “significant possibility” that the individual “could establish eligibility for asylum” in removal proceedings. See 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(v); 8 C.F.R. §§ 208.30 (e)(2)-(3).

42. If the asylum officer finds a credible fear, the noncitizen is taken out of the expedited removal process. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(v). The person’s case, including claims for asylum and other forms of protection, is then generally considered in regular removal proceedings before an immigration judge under INA Section 240.

43. In regular removal proceedings, noncitizens have the right to counsel, to present evidence, to cross-examine witnesses, and to appeal, if necessary, to the Board of Immigration Appeals and a federal court of appeals. 8 U.S.C. §§ 1229, 1229a, 1252(a), (b); 8 C.F.R. §§ 1003.12-1003.47. They also have substantially more time to gather evidence, find and consult with counsel, develop arguments, and otherwise prepare.

44. By contrast, if the asylum officer finds no credible fear, the noncitizen can request review of that decision by an immigration judge. If the immigration judge finds a credible fear, the noncitizen is then generally placed in regular Section 240 removal proceedings. 8 CFR Sec. 1208.30(g)(2)(iv)(B). If, however, the immigration judge affirms the asylum officer's adverse finding, the applicant is subject to removal "without further hearing or review." 8 U.S.C. §§ 1225(b)(1)(B)(i), (iii); see 8 U.S.C. §§ 1252(a)(2)(A), (e).

45. In addition to screening for asylum, the credible fear interview is also used to screen claims for withholding of removal and CAT relief.

B. The Interim Final Rule Models Previous Illegal Rules.

46. The Proclamation and Rule reprise previous efforts to restrict asylum eligibility based on manner of entry, which courts have held unlawful.

47. In November 2018, DHS and DOJ attempted to bar asylum for any person who entered via the U.S.-Mexico border between ports of entry. As here, they issued this ban as an interim final rule concurrent with a presidential proclamation. These actions were challenged, and they were enjoined and later vacated as incompatible with 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(1) and procedurally improper. See East Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Trump, 349 F. Supp. 3d 838, 844 (N.D. Cal. 2018)

(finding an “irreconcilabl[e] conflict[.]” with 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(1)); O.A. v. Trump, 404 F. Supp. 3d 109, 150 (D.D.C. 2019) (holding that the entry ban “is not compatible with the congressional mandate that all [noncitizens] present in the United States may apply for asylum, regardless of whether they entered the United States at a designated port of entry” (internal quotation marks omitted)). The government’s appeals failed. See East Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Trump, 932 F.3d 742 (9th Cir. 2018) (refusing to stay the injunction); Trump v. East Bay Sanctuary Covenant, 139 S. Ct. 782 (2018) (same); East Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Biden, 993 F.3d 640, 671, 675-77 (9th Cir. 2021) (upholding injunction on the merits).

48. In May 2023, following a truncated comment period, DHS and DOJ issued a rule entitled “Circumvention of Lawful Pathways,” 88 Fed. Reg. 31314 (“Lawful Pathways Rule”). The rule had numerous components, but as relevant here, it effectively barred asylum to non-Mexican adults and families who either entered outside of a port of entry or approached a port without an appointment made via a smartphone app called CBP One. See 8 C.F.R. § 208.33(a)(1), (a)(2)(i)-(ii). That rule included a narrow exception for “exceptionally compelling circumstances,” defined to include an “acute medical emergency,” an “imminent and extreme threat to life or safety,” or being a “victim of a severe form of trafficking in persons,” 8 C.F.R. § 208.33(a)(3)(i). It also included limited exceptions for people who were unable to use CBP One or who applied for and were denied asylum in a country through which they transited. DHS also introduced implementation guidance concurrent with the Lawful Pathways Rule that reduced the time people would have to consult with counsel or other representatives before credible fear interviews from 48 hours to 24 hours. See DHS, Fact Sheet: U.S. Government Announces Sweeping New Actions to Manage Regional Migration (Apr. 27, 2023).

49. A court vacated the Lawful Pathways Rule as, among other things, contrary to 8

U.S.C. § 1158(a)(1) and procedurally improper. East Bay Sanctuary Covenant v. Biden, 683 F. Supp. 3d 1025 (N.D. Cal. 2023), stayed pending appeal, 2023 WL 11662094 (9th Cir. Aug. 3, 2023), appeal held in abeyance, 93 F.4th 1130 (9th Cir. 2024).

C. The Proclamation, Interim Final Rule, and Guidance

50. On June 3, 2024, President Biden issued a Proclamation with a stated goal of “securing the border” with Mexico. 89 Fed. Reg. 48487. It announced that the entry of any noncitizen into the United States across the southern border was suspended “at 12:01 a.m. eastern daylight time on June 5, 2024,” and that suspension will continue if “the Secretary has made a factual determination that there has been a 7-consecutive-calendar-day average of 2,500 encounters or more.” Id. at 48491. Per the announcement, the suspension will be lifted “14 calendar days after the Secretary makes a factual determination that there has been a 7-consecutive-calendar-day average of less than 1,500 encounters” a day.³ Id. at 48491.

51. According to the Proclamation, the need for executive action was the “direct result of the Congress’s failure to update” the asylum system. Id. at 48488.

52. Based on the Proclamation, the Department of Homeland Security and Department of Justice jointly issued the Rule on June 4, 2024, effective the next day. 89 Fed. Reg. 48710. The Rule incorporates the Proclamation by reference and applies the label “emergency border circumstances” to time periods when the Proclamation purports to suspend entry across the southern border. Id. at 48711.

³ An “encounter” refers to a noncitizen who (i) is physically apprehended by CBP immigration officers within 100 miles of the southwest border during the 14-day period immediately after entry between ports of entry; (ii) is physically apprehended by DHS personnel at the southern coastal border during the 14-day period immediately after entry between ports of entry; or (iii) is determined to be inadmissible at a port of entry. Noncitizens in the third category are excluded from the DHS Secretary’s threshold calculation. 89 Fed. Reg. 48710, 48715 n.33.

53. The Rule cites 8 U.S.C. § 1158(b)(2)(C) as authority for these changes. That provision gives the Attorney General the power “by regulation [to] establish additional limitations and conditions, consistent with [§ 1158], under which [a noncitizen] shall be ineligible for asylum.” The Rule also relies on 8 U.S.C. § 1158(d)(5)(B), which gives the Attorney General the power to “provide by regulation for any other conditions or limitations on the consideration of an application for asylum not inconsistent with this chapter.” These provisions, however, require new regulations to be “consistent with” existing statutes. Id. § 1158(b)(2)(C). By contrast, the Rule effectively eliminates asylum for virtually every noncitizen who crosses into the United States without first obtaining an appointment at a port of entry using the CBP One app, in violation of the statute.

54. The CBP One app has been plagued with problems. For many noncitizens, making an appointment to present at a port of entry is impossible. Some lack access to up-to-date smartphones, Wi-Fi, a cellular data plan, or reliable electricity, all of which are necessary to use CBP One. Others do not understand the few languages used in the app, are illiterate, lack technological know-how, or have disabilities that prevent them from successfully navigating the app. And the U.S. government has artificially capped the number of appointment slots far below the number of noncitizens who need them, meaning that even those who are able to use the app are repeatedly denied appointments. As a result, countless asylum seekers have been forced to wait indefinitely under precarious conditions in Mexico in the hope of obtaining scarce appointments.

55. The Departments imposed the requirement to use CBP One in the Lawful Pathways Rule, but that rule—unlike the Rule here—did not apply to citizens of Mexico. Under this Rule, Mexican citizens who wish to seek asylum in the United States are now expected to wait, in the country where they fear persecution, for some unknown amount of time to preserve their right to pursue this remedy.

56. The Rule creates a narrow exception to the asylum bar for individuals who enter between ports of entry due to “exceptionally compelling circumstances.” 89 Fed. Reg. 48710, 48718, 48733. These circumstances are extremely limited and mirror those adopted in the Lawful Pathways Rule. Exceptionally compelling circumstances are defined to include situations where noncitizens can show they or a family member with whom they are traveling are experiencing acute medical emergencies, imminent and extreme threats to life or safety, or severe forms of trafficking in persons at the time of their entry into the United States. Id.

57. Under the Rule, DHS will apply this asylum bar during credible fear interviews in expedited removal. In those interviews, the Rule places the burden on the asylum seeker to demonstrate an “exceptionally compelling circumstance[.]” by a preponderance of the evidence. Id. This is inconsistent with the “significant possibility” standard that Congress established for credible fear interviews to safeguard a person’s opportunity to fully present potentially viable asylum claims.

58. The Rule also implements policy changes governing expedited removal that create significant hurdles to obtaining the other two forms of protection that theoretically are still available: withholding of removal and CAT relief.

59. First, to seek such protection, noncitizens must “manifest[.] a fear of return, express[.] an intention to apply for asylum or protection, or express[.] a fear of persecution or torture.” Id. at 48718. Border Patrol agents and other immigration officers will no longer “provide individualized advisals on asylum or ask the noncitizen questions related to whether they have a fear of return.” Id. at 48740.

60. Evidence from prior experience shows that when the manifestation of fear standard is used, noncitizens' statements of fear are routinely ignored, even assuming noncitizens know that they must manifest a fear without being asked. The practical effect is that noncitizens with genuine fear are removed without being referred for credible fear interviews. Noncitizens may not know that they need to "manifest" a fear of return in order to avoid removal; they may not manifest their fear in words or actions that immigration officers expect or require; they may speak a language that immigration officers cannot understand; they may be intimidated by a show of force from voicing such fear; and they may be hungry, thirsty, ill, or disoriented, and so be unable to demonstrate a manifestation of fear observable by an immigration officer. That is exactly why regulations have long required individualized advisals and questioning, which the Rule eliminates.

61. Even where noncitizens are able to manifest a fear and given a credible fear interview, they must now meet a heightened "reasonable probability of persecution" standard to pass screening for withholding of removal or CAT protection. Id. at 48718, 48746. The Rule defines "reasonable probability" as "substantially more than a reasonable possibility, but somewhat less than more likely than not." Id. at 46746 (citing 8 C.F.R. 208.35(b)(2)(i), 1208.35(b)(2)(ii)). The Rule states that this new standard "requires a greater specificity of the claim in the noncitizen's testimony" than previously necessary under the "reasonable possibility" standard imposed by the Lawful Pathways rule—a standard that was left undefined. Id. at 46746.

62. The Guidance further constrains this process. Until last year, noncitizens were given a minimum of 48 hours to consult with a lawyer or other person of their choosing before their credible fear interview. This consultation is crucial to ensuring that noncitizens have a meaningful opportunity to present their claims. Noncitizens who are unfamiliar with the U.S. immigration system will be unprepared to properly explain the basis for their fear to an immigration officer. Last year, DHS shortened that consultation period to a minimum of 24 hours. The Guidance now requires that noncitizens be given a minimum of only four hours to consult with a lawyer or other individual. The result will inevitably be a large increase in erroneous negative credible fear findings and a correspondingly large increase in the number of noncitizens illegally returned to persecution and torture.

63. All key aspects of the Rule—including the asylum bar, the manifestation of fear test, and the reasonable probability screening standard—are arbitrary and capricious. Defendants failed to consider critical factors, including the harm the Rule would cause asylum seekers in need of protection and the interaction of the Rule with other policies. They likewise ignored or contradicted significant evidence undermining the reasons for the Rule including, for example, evidence that the Rule will breach the government’s non-refoulement obligations. Defendants departed from prior practice, including by raising the border screening standard to an unprecedented level, without adequate explanation. And they repeatedly relied on impermissible considerations contrary to Congress’s policy choices. Defendants made these same errors in adopting the Guidance and unreasonably reducing the credible fear consultation period to just 4 hours. Accordingly, both the Rule and Guidance are arbitrary and capricious under the APA.

64. What is more, the Rule’s momentous regulatory changes and the accompanying Guidance were all issued without going through notice-and-comment procedures under the APA. Defendants claimed “good cause” to bypass the notice-and-comment procedures normally required for a rulemaking pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 553(b)(B), and they likewise dispensed with the 30-day waiting period that is required even where a notice and comment period is provided, 5 U.S.C. § 553(d). Defendants also invoked the “foreign affairs” exception to those procedures. 5 U.S.C. § 553(a)(1). The record does not establish either the “good cause” or “foreign affairs”

II. Harms to Plaintiffs

65. Under the Rule, Las Americas' clients must now "manifest" an intent to apply for asylum or a fear of return before receiving a credible fear interview. As a result, Las Americas must revamp its representation strategy and divert resources to preparing individuals who have a genuine fear to manifest such a fear before entering the United States, significantly limiting the number of clients it can serve.

66. The quick timeframe for removal under the Guidance also impedes Las Americas' mission. It now has just four hours, some of which are outside its business hours, to reach and confer with clients, which significantly reduces its ability to effectively represent them.

67. The strain on Las Americas' ability to represent its clients is exacerbated by the heightened standard for establishing credible fear. Such preparation takes more time—not less—and will be difficult, and often impossible, to do effectively in the limited time the Proclamation, Rule, and Guidance give to consult with clients before credible fear interviews.

68. The heightened standard also will result in more negative fear findings. This increase, in turn, means Las Americas will have to spend more time with each client challenging an asylum officer's negative fear findings before an immigration judge at the final stage of the expedited removal process. As a result, Las Americas will both have to reduce the number of clients it serves and will be unable to represent clients as effectively as in the past.

69. Even for the clients who manage to both manifest a fear and also overcome the higher reasonable probability standard, the Proclamation, Rule, and Guidance will harm Las Americas' ability to engage in full representation of these individuals in removal proceedings.

First, because people who were previously eligible for asylum are now limited to withholding of removal and CAT protection, which require a more stringent burden of proof than asylum, Las Americas will have to spend more time developing evidentiary records in those cases. Second, because withholding of removal and CAT protection do not allow family members to receive derivative benefits, Las Americas will have to engage in full representation for each member of a family, which will substantially increase the number of overall applications it has to complete.

70. The new policy also jeopardizes some of Las Americas' most critical funding streams. Many of Las Americas' existing grants require it to serve a certain number of clients each year. The need to spend additional resources on each client, reducing the number of clients served, risks placing Las Americas below the threshold required for these grants. A loss of funding will further hamper Las Americas' ability to fulfill its mission.

71. The Proclamation, Rule, and Guidance similarly harm RAICES' work. These changes will require RAICES to revamp its representation strategy and to spend more time with each individual client. The heightened standard will also increase the number of clients for whom RAICES will need to challenge an asylum officer's negative credible fear finding before an immigration judge. This additional time spent will limit its client population and its ability to fulfill its mission.

72. RAICES is also one of the very few organizations that provides counsel to individuals facing the credible fear process while detained in CBP custody. The changes in the Rule will make it harder for RAICES to provide those services, and the four-hour consultation window will make doing so all-but-impossible—rendering obsolete the system for that work that RAICES has spent the last year developing.

73. In addition, RAICES will be harmed by the expedited timeline for removal. Less time to reach and prepare clients will result in less effective representation. As with Las Americas, this strain on effective representation is made worse by the Rule's heightened standard for establishing credible fear, which requires more time with clients to prepare them for interviews with asylum officers. The increased need and decreased time frame hampers RAICES' ability to effectively serve its clients.

74. The new policy also jeopardizes some of RAICES' critical funding streams. Much of the funding in certain RAICES' programs is tied to the number of clients it is able to serve. If RAICES must divert its resources to spend more time assisting fewer clients, that funding may be put in jeopardy. A loss of funding will further reduce RAICES' ability to fulfill its mission.

75. For both organizations, the issuance of these changes via an Interim Final Rule deprived them of an opportunity to comment on the changes before they took effect. As a result, neither organization had an opportunity to put relevant information in front of Defendants that might have informed their choices or prompted them to abandon these changes completely.

76. For both organizations, these changes are likely to cause additional harm as staff become frustrated with their inability to provide meaningful assistance to impacted noncitizens because of the Rule's new limits and the Guidelines' imposition of an impossible timeline. This frustration is likely to lead to vicarious trauma, burnout, and an inability to sustain staffing to fulfill the organizations' respective missions.

CLAIMS FOR RELIEF

FIRST CLAIM FOR RELIEF

(Violation of Immigration and Nationality Act and Administrative Procedure Act – Rule Eliminating Asylum Between Ports is Contrary to Law, 8 U.S.C. § 1158)

77. All of the foregoing allegations are repeated and realleged as if fully set forth herein.

78. The INA provides, with certain exceptions not relevant here, that “[a]ny [noncitizen] who is physically present in the United States or who arrives in the United States (whether or not at a designated port of arrival and including [a noncitizen] who is brought to the United States after having been interdicted in international or United States waters), irrespective of such [noncitizen’s] status, may apply for asylum in accordance with this section or, where applicable, section 1225(b) of this title.” 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(1).

79. The Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 706, provides that courts “shall . . . hold unlawful and set aside agency action” that is “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).

80. The Rule is contrary to law, including 8 U.S.C. § 1158(a)(1). With limited exceptions, the Rule categorically bars noncitizens from asylum merely because they enter without inspection between ports or at ports but without a CBP One appointment.

SECOND CLAIM FOR RELIEF

(Violation of Immigration and Nationality Act and Administrative Procedure Act – Rule is Contrary to Law, 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b))

81. The INA requires that any noncitizen subjected to expedited removal procedures who “indicates either an intention to apply for asylum . . . or a fear of persecution” must be referred for a credible fear screening interview with an asylum officer. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(A)(ii).

82. In that screening interview, the asylum officer is to determine whether the noncitizen has a “credible fear of persecution.” Id. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(ii), (iii). A credible fear of persecution is defined by statute as “a significant possibility, taking into account the credibility of the statements made by the [noncitizen] in support of the [noncitizen’s] claim and such other facts as are known to the officer, that the [noncitizen] could establish eligibility for asylum under [8 U.S.C.] section 1158.” Id. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(v).

83. The Rule improperly requires asylum officers conducting credible fear interviews and immigration judges reviewing negative credible fear determinations to apply standards other than the “significant possibility” standard, including when applying the Rule’s exceptions at the credible fear stage. For example, the Rule requires asylum officers conducting credible fear interviews and immigration judges reviewing negative credible fear determinations to determine whether a noncitizen has established an “exceptionally compelling circumstance” by preponderance of the evidence rather than under a “significant possibility” standard.

84. The APA provides that a Court “shall hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings, and conclusions found to be” “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law” [or] “in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or short of statutory right.” 5 U.S.C. §§ 706(2)(A)-(C).

85. The Rule is contrary to law, including 8 U.S.C. §§ 1225(b)(1)(A)(ii), (B)(ii), (B)(iii), and (B)(v).

THIRD CLAIM FOR RELIEF

(Violation of INA and Administrative Procedure Act – Rule is Arbitrary and Capricious)

86. All of the foregoing allegations are repeated and realleged as if fully set forth herein.

87. The APA provides that courts “shall . . . hold unlawful and set aside agency action” that is “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).

88. All key aspects of the Rule—including the asylum bar, the manifestation of fear test, and the reasonable probability screening standard—are arbitrary and capricious. Defendants failed to consider critical factors, including the harm the Rule would cause asylum seekers in need of protection and the interaction of the Rule with other policies. They likewise ignored or contradicted significant evidence undermining the reasons for the Rule including, for example, evidence that the Rule will breach the government’s non-refoulement obligations. Defendants departed from prior practice, including by raising the fear screening standard to an unprecedented level, without adequate explanation. And they repeatedly relied on impermissible considerations contrary to Congress’s policy choices. Defendants made these same errors in adopting the Guidance and unreasonably reducing the credible fear consultation period to just four hours.

89. Accordingly, the Rule is arbitrary and capricious. See 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).

FOURTH CLAIM FOR RELIEF

(Violation of the Administrative Procedure Act – Failure to Observe Required Procedures)

90. All of the foregoing allegations are repeated and realleged as if fully set forth herein.

91. The APA requires notice and opportunity for comment prior to the promulgation of regulations. 5 U.S.C. §§ 553(b), (c). The Attorney General and Secretary of Homeland Security failed to provide notice and an opportunity to comment on the IFR and Guidance in a timely manner.

92. The APA also requires that a regulation be published “no less than 30 days before its effective date.” 5 U.S.C. § 553(d). The Attorney General and Secretary of Homeland Security failed to publish the IFR and Guidance 30 days before their effective date.

93. The Attorney General and Secretary of Homeland Security have not articulated reasons sufficient to show good cause why these requirements are inapplicable, or why the foreign affairs exception is applicable.

FIFTH CLAIM FOR RELIEF

(Violation of Administrative Procedure Act – Guidance is Contrary to Law and Arbitrary and Capricious)

94. All of the foregoing allegations are repeated and realleged as if fully set forth herein.

95. The APA provides that courts “shall . . . hold unlawful and set aside agency action” that is “arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.” 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).

96. The INA provides that a noncitizen “who is eligible for [a credible fear] interview may consult with a person or persons of the [noncitizen’s] choosing prior to the interview or any review thereof.” 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(iv); see also 8 C.F.R. § 208.30(d)(4).

97. The statute and implementing regulations require meaningful access to a consultation and time to prepare for the credible fear interview. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(B)(iv); 8 C.F.R. §§ 208.30(d)(2), (4).

98. The Guidance makes meaningful access to a consultation and time to prepare for the credible fear interview effectively unavailable. It is therefore contrary to law. See 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).

99. The Guidance is also arbitrary and capricious because, in adopting a 4-hour consultation period, Defendants failed to articulate reasoned explanations for their decisions, which represent changes in agency policy; considered factors that Congress did not intend to be considered; entirely failed to consider important aspects of the problem; and offered explanations for their decisions that run counter to the evidence before the agencies.

100. Accordingly, the Guidance is arbitrary and capricious. See 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A).

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs respectfully pray for the following relief:

- a. Vacatur of the Rule and Guidance;
- b. Declaratory judgment finding the Rule and Guidance contrary to law and arbitrary and capricious, and procedurally invalid;
- c. An order awarding plaintiffs' costs of suit and reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses pursuant to any applicable law;
- d. Such other and further relief as the court deems equitable, just, and proper.
